Since the rise of technology, it has become an indispensable part of our lives. People use social media regardless of their age and gender. Though mostly use it for entertainment purpose yet many use it for channeling their inner voice so that it can reach millions of people. I am not saying that social media experience is worthless but there is a need to define a limit. It is highly addictive and people just to be cool are blindly following everything they see write my essay online. Although I am also one of those people who like to follow every silly thing on social media and make it my goal to discuss every lame thing and put myself into arguments where I can gain maximum attention.

There is no denying that this situation is highly addictive but as for me it just pushes the right button of my brain. I get eager to participate in every ridiculous argument and love to intervene in the arguments that people are having regarding a misguided associate or an ignorant racist. I feel like being called upon to serve up these bizarre things kind of give satisfaction that is beyond measurable. It is like winning a lottery or a freestyle boxing match.

According to an old saying, it is not wise to argue with a fool in public unless the public knows which is which. Similarly, with social media arguing with a fool depicts that there are two as the people who are interested to see you arguing with fools are other fools. Nevertheless, in reality, you can be a king of idiots but to attain that status on the internet you require an expensive marketing and PR team to create your drama.

Now we all are aware of the guilty pleasure that we feel after being part of the foolish arguments. I feel that the chance to serve some fool is highly addictive. It's like your favorite dessert that you want more and more. Although, despite immense satisfaction, I feel hollow inside. I unnecessarily become aggressive and mean in real life and life on the internet. It is like the line between reality and internet life seemed blurred and I cannot even distinguish between the two.

No rules, no perspectives, and no mind. From time to time I deactivate Facebook to save myself from this delusional world and protect my sanity but despite deactivating it, the application holds on to all of my information. It automatically knows that I will be back soon. I mean how could it not know that I will return? It is familiar with my habits and knows all the details of my life.

Surprise Ending

The essay writing service has used various devices and phrases to create a strong impression and to provide an interesting and surprising ending. Many words are foreshadowing and repeated in the whole story. A sentence like "there was strand gray hair present" and many other sentences made the story end interesting.
